Attending a job fair is an opportunity to talk directly with hiring officials of Colorado school districts. All licensed candidates and those who are scheduled to student teach and complete their teacher education programs in the spring of 2017 are invited to attend.

The traditional style of job fairs typically starts with a line-intensive session where candidates attempt to schedule as many as possible face-to-face interviews with individual school districts later in the day. This design works well for many school districts and candidates should keep this process in mind as they search. Because of these uncertainties, many districts have moved from interviewing to more of a "meet and greet." These "meet and greets" will be conducted throughout the day by some school districts. Each district will individually determine their format.

What is a "meet and greet?" The "meet and greet" format is a brief conversation between candidates and districts. It allows recruiters to talk to as many candidates as possible throughout the day. Don't underestimate the power of a "meet and greet!" Some of these first impression conversations may lead to interviews later in the year.
